

THE BLOC

G*BOY MANIFESTO

SIGILS, SYMBOLS, AND MEMETIC REBELLION
IN THE AGE OF COERCIVE HOMOGENY

WITH LOVE FROM 1NK, Z-L1N3, GUMM1 1999

BACKWARD

Each of us is born into this world with a spark of individuality, a traveling mote of who-we-are-ness that existed before we took on this fleshy body. As we learn the ways of this world we discover it is best for us to shield the other from our unique aspects. It is better for them, it is better for the machine in which we are a cog, therefore it is better for us to just be a reflection of them.

At work we hide our quirks for the sake of efficiency, in school we hide our disdain for certain topics to achieve the grade, in social scenes and dating we hide our messy insides to be palatable to the object of our desires. We carry a sack of masks, swapping one for another as the situation suits.

This has, to some degree, always been the case. Humans have always had to adapt to their social environment in order to thrive. But the margins were wide, the hermit, the monk, the traveling bard - there were open fields in which to shout at the clouds, there were unexplored woods where we could speak to the old spirits, unashamed of our who-we-are in the lonely expanses.

But now the world closes in.

As technology and media seeps into us from every angle we see the models and molds we are to slip into every place we turn. Our masks all take on similar shapes as our society becomes a singular entity. The maskless margins of our wanderings become relegated to anonymous chat rooms and dark bars, the bard delivers music from their bedroom, still bombarded by these molds even in their plastic hideout.

We may look at this merging of masks and see it as natural, an organic extension of the birth of the internet, something unavoidable, an evolutionary necessity. The city-living white clover no longer produces as much cyanide to protect itself from roaming herbivores, it does so out of necessity because it also does not receive enough water in this new environment to maintain its original state. It's all natural. Evolution.

But there is a finger on the scale. This unification, this slow draw to the hive, is not just a natural byproduct of faster information delivery and larger "community" formation. There is a purposeful effort to morph the many into one. E pluribus unum, after all.

THE BLOC

The Bloc is many. The Bloc is not one thing. The Bloc was started in basements and high school computer labs and internet cafes between games of Dredgecraft. The Bloc is a group of individuals that have been brought together under the current of the systems that are now in use to control us. We are the breath of the fringe, the pulse of the wandering bard in the forest of our new methods of connectivity.

We refuse singularity and centralization. We refuse sameness. Our only identifying feature is the red-eared-hood. Our other masks have been discarded into the wastes of the ad-network, the data warehouse, the "social" network.

We are self governing. Our only goal is to awaken the drones to their true nature through reflecting back to them the secret orchestration of their unique soul's demise.

ORIGIN

Several years ago our earliest member made his way into a secure Miter Corporation file storage system. The Miter Corporation is, of course, a military industrial supplier of the highest secrecy.

We all know that they make bombs and planes and drones and technology systems to protect our nation, taking blank checks from our government in order to do so.

This is a reality we have all surrendered to so that we may sleep at night in our cutout houses in our copy-pasted neighborhoods. We may now feel safe as we sleep! We may dream of the best deals! The hottest new gossip! Sweating between our discount sheets, glazed by our Slumber pills (8 hours now little worker!).

The string he started to pull enlightened him to something deeper than engines and explosives and super-jets. The Miter Corporation's primary efforts were not in physical devices but in those of the human mind. They had been, for years, "acquiring" specially able humans and putting them through many trials in order to awaken certain elements of their minds that allowed them to control reality in ways that have been previously relegated to fantasy stories or medieval magical treatise. This is not a group of New Age hustlers. This is the most well funded industrial corporation in world history.

HARMONY

At face value the files he found indicated that there is a supreme power to the human mind. It indicated that there is a higher level of reality beyond the material world we are taught is the cornerstone of all advancement - "the only true reality can be measured with slide rules and is the conglomeration of physical particles. Who you are, what you are, your dreams, your art - they are outputs from a physical system" - the Miter Corporation proves this wrong, not only through their writings and documentation, but through - the most powerful form of belief: the use of their funds in the market.

Billions and billions of dollars (our dollars) are spent on accelerating the understanding of this underlying truth: mind comes before matter (or from a certain perspective, in unison with it).

There are some atrocities to human rights involved here, there are some horrors associated with information being kept from the public, but that is not where the Bloc feels we must step in. We have found our calling in the knot at the end of these threads.

This member discovered there is a unified mission being carried out by a group of organizations, of which the Miter Corporation only seems to be an appendage. There is controlling network of companies that you buy things from every day, whose television you consume, and others you do not know - working together toward a certain end.

And what is this end? A more powerful country? One stacked with super psychic soldiers? A future where we can all go bowling without using our hands?

No.

The end is Harmony. Not the drug (though your favorite sedative is not inconsequential to the plan), but a deeply secret program of the same name and goal: sedation, unification, homogeny, and control...
